

Dear people,

I think the RM-10354 should be denied. The reason being that the way to get an amateur license has been made so easy to obtain that if one wants the privilage of a higher class then they should take the steps already in place. I was a VC and had to give it up, so many came in and passed the tests, but if you talked to them they did not know one thing about electronics or radio. They would tell me that all you have to do is memorize the answers to the question pool. I sure wish the test was not a carbon copy of the question pool. Whith it being so easy to get the upgrades, I can not see why it should be handed to them. I have been a ham for 47 years, and I hope the ham bands do not go the way of CB. But I guess many want the everything with out any work.

Thank you,

Allan Kruger    W7ZK